

As scientists at St Peters, we think independently and raise questions about working scientifically. We develop in confidence and competence in a range of practical skills, planning and carrying out scientific investigations. We develop excellent scientific knowledge and understanding, and we communicate this in scientific writing and verbal explanations. We develop a passion for science and its links to our everyday lives and its application in past, present and future technologies.

